The homeowners were hoping to achieve a timeless kitchen, one that embraced the benefits of good health for their busy family. They approached Tennille Burnup to bring their plans to life due to her reputation for designing incredible spaces, and the rest is history.

Lots of smart storage was requested for this space, particularly for benchtop appliances when not in use. The homeowners' colour preference was a restrained, serene palette with contrasting timber for warmth.

This room's uniqueness stems from the final colour palette of soft green with dark-green elements. Tennille and her team placed Muuto pendant lights over the island bench as well as a Muuto wall dot in the same colour as a pantry door handle to create a harmonious look.

The island bench is the largest size possible without needing a join, providing lots of space for the cook to prep meals on one side and room for the kids to sit while they do their homework on the other. The kitchen nook/appliance cupboard was designed to be hidden from view when not in use. The kitchen sink faces the beautiful backdrop of the home's well-kept backyard.

Tennille specified Silestone Eternal Statuario for its natural and elegant soft vein effect. Polytec Ravine in Natural Oak was used for the internals of the kitchen nook/appliance cupboard, with Shaker-style cabinetry to round out the classic look, which marries with this home's overall Edwardian charm.

This space has been dubbed a "wellness" kitchen due to the soothing green accent colouring and the smart storage, which includes a little step shelf on the cooker side to house lovely oils and spices for easy access when cooking. The kitchen's joinery enables the space to be closed off from view when required, enhancing a sense of order and calm even if the washing up is yet to be done.
